

The Great Word (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Great Word
In the beginning there was Light; a torch held aloft that the form and shape of things might be seen, and their uses; and in the first brightness, filling the void, the slow, sublime stirring of the seeds of which worlds were to be the fruit; the silent ordering of stars in their places, and the unrolling of the curtain of night shutting out the splendour of the day and making a quiet space of darkness for the coming of the stars.
About the Publisher
