When Bryce Dorrell married a girl he met in college, his high school sweetheart Mary Lee Matthews buried herself in teaching in order to forget the man who broke her heart. Now he's back as coach of the high school football team and a widower with a seven-year-old son who is now a student in her second-grade class. With Carter needing all the support and encouragement to get over the loss of his mother, Marly finds herself loving the young boy and guiding him through his grief. As much as she cares about Carter, she still has difficulty trusting and forgiving Bryce for the hurt of the past ten years. When a storm causes major damage at the school and injures Marly and several of her students, Bryce realizes how much he loves her, but will he be able to overcome the past and find a future with Marly?
