

Maeves Afternoon Delight

Maeve Archer turns to her allotment when her life hits a glitch. It brings her more than cabbages! In fact, once she overcomes obstructions in the form of a clipboard happy neighbour and an irate ex-husband, it brings her a totally joyous life. Margaret Graham has written 12 novels, two of which have been bestsellers. (Several of the back list are shortly to be re-issued by Random House) She has written two creative writing handbooks and founded the Yeovil Literary Prize and Words for the Wounded Writing Prize. She is working on another two novels for Random House. She spends her time teaching and mentoring aspiring authors, digging her allotment, and enjoying London when she really should be writing.

Afternoon Delight is a hit song recorded by Starland Vocal Band, known for its close harmony and sexually suggestive wordplay. It was written by Bill Danoff. Maeve Archer turns to her allotment when her life hits a glitch. It brings her more than cabbages! In fact, once she overcomes obstructions in the form of a Gordon Snell, husband of Maeve Binchy, pictured at a special afternoon tea at the Gaiety held to remember her and to launch the premiere. It was the most startling thing anyone could ever do, he says, smiling with delight. He hated to think of how alluring she would be on the afternoon of the recital. I want all eyes to be on you, he said firmly as he gently kissed Maeve's hand. Smiling and kissing him quickly on the cheek, she made him turn pink with delight.
